KOKO'S JOB SAFE (FOR NOW) AS LABOUR COURT BLOCKS MOVE BY ESKOM TO FIRE HIM

Money web reports that the Labour Court in Johannesburg issued an interim order on Friday, restraining Eskom from unlawfully terminating its head of generation Matshela Koko's contract of employment.

The order was based on a breach of the terms of conditions of his employment and a directive issued to Eskom by government in a statement put out on 21 January 2018 stating: 'The board is directed to immediately remove all Eskom executives who are facing allegations of serious corruption and other acts of impropriety, including Mr. Matshela Koko ...'. An ultimatum was put to Koko on 25 January to resign before 10:00 on the next day because he was seen as 'the face of corruption' at Eskom, or be dismissed.

Koko then applied for an interdict to prevent Eskom from firing him. In an affidavit in support of his application, Koko pointed out that he had been found not guilty in an Eskom disciplinary process and was not facing any other charges. He also referred to three other managers at Eskom who were given similar ultimatums as his and who were subsequently fired on 24 January. The return date to court has been set for 6 February.

Nehawu, Sol Plaatje University reach wage agreement ending three-week strike

SABC News reports that members of the National Education, Health and Allied Workers' Union (Nehawu) at Sol Plaatje University in Kimberley, have reached a settlement with the higher learning institution after being on strike for three weeks. Union chairperson Keeme Mongale said they would be meeting with the university on Wednesday to sign the agreed settlement.

The members had been demanding a 10% salary hike, an annual 100% bonus and a 13th salary cheque. 'We agreed on a 13th salary cheque and a 100% bonus for the low earners, followed by 80% for those who earn from R470,000 and upwards. The bonus of two other salary groups remains on a 70% and 7% respectively. We managed to say, based on the sliding scale, let the low earners at least get an upward movement in terms of salary remuneration,' Mongale explained.
