QUESTION 5

5.1 Sales promotions are essentially a short term plan. Immediate response is important. Sales promotions are used when you want a quick increase in cash flow or when you have excess stock that you have to get rid of. The latter are often seen in the end of season sales in clothing stores.

Advertising campaigns are run over a longer period of time and have long term objectives such as brand building or changing shopping patterns and attitudes. (6)

5.2 5.2.1
- Company staff
- Customers/consumers
- Retailers (3)

5.2.2 Company staff: The objectives are the same as an incentive programme, to encourage staff to by means of a promotion or special offer, work harder and increase sales.

Customers/consumers: To attract customers to the store to purchase what is on offer.

Retailers: To encourage retailers, through a promotion to stock your product. If it is worth it, the retailers will recommend your product instead of the competitor's product. (6)

5.2.3 Company staff: Any form of incentive will work trips, money, gifts, bonuses, etc.

Customers/Consumers: Purchase privilege plans, point of sale discounts, give-aways, vouchers, free samples.

Give-aways, competitions, free offers (6)
