TEXT ASCROLL YOUR LIFE AWAY

- 1 If you lose days by endlessly scrolling on your smartphone, you are not alone. According to Ofcom, the communications regulator in the United Kingdom, the average person checks their phone every 12 minutes. For many people, it is the first thing they do in the morning and the last thing they do at night. This troublesome, continuous pressure is driven by molecules in the brain. 5
- 2 One molecule¹ in particular, called dopamine, is usually blamed for this kind of behaviour. Dopamine has been nicknamed the 'feel-good' molecule due to its role in the brain's reward system. However, it is not just about pleasure, but also the anticipation of something pleasurable. That is what keeps most cellphone users checking their phones. 10
- 3 Some researchers believe that digital media activates the same part of the brain as drugs and alcohol do, releasing dopamine. Mobile games and social media applications (apps) are designed to maintain addiction in the same way. Other researchers believe that social media addiction is not the same as substance abuse. While using digital media increases the release of dopamine, it does so by far lower amounts than any drug substance. However, the 2023 research from Brown University in the United States of America found that half of adolescent girls were addicted to *TikTok*². 15
- 4 Addicted or not, people spend an average of four hours a day on their cellphones. Most of them would probably like to recover some of that time. So, the burning question is, can people use their knowledge of the brain's reward system to loosen the smartphone's grip on them? A possible solution which one can find on *Instagram*³ or TikTok is ironically dopamine fasting. This fasting is a form of meditation or therapy which tries to limit uncontrollable desires. The purpose is to change one's behaviour by cutting oneself off social media for a short period. 20 25
- 5 Participants of this dopamine fasting claim that a brief period of fasting works the magic. It allows them to engage better with their favourite activities while developing a healthier relationship with technology. Even so, researchers whose work looks at excessive social media use often agree that some kind of digital detox may be a good thing. 'I am a strong advocate of social media fasting,' says Daria Kuss, a professor of psychology at Nottingham Trent University in the United Kingdom. She claims that a weekend of fasting may help to break the habit of using social media excessively. 30

6	Her research shows that spending time with friends and family outside of social media strengthens personal bonds. Therefore, meeting a friend for coffee may be a more positive experience than chatting with them online. This will guarantee better personal relationships.	35

TEXT CSETTING REALISTIC GOALS

Setting realistic goals is crucial for achieving success and maintaining motivation. Here are some key steps to help you set your goals with ease.

Start by reflecting on your strengths and weaknesses. Understand what you truly want to achieve and why it matters to you. Define your goals with clarity. Objectives that are vague make it difficult to track progress.

Large goals can be overwhelming. Break large goals into smaller, manageable tasks. Establish reasonable deadlines for each goal. Life is unpredictable, and circumstances may change along the way. Be prepared to adapt your goals if the need arises. Speak with a person whom you trust about your goals. Being accountable increases commitment.

Evaluate your progress on a regular basis and seek feedback from a person who guides you. The experience from this evaluation can assist you and keep you motivated. Stumbling blocks are inevitable as some people may view your goals as less important and unrealistic. Do not allow challenges to set you back.

By following these steps, you can set realistic goals that align with your aspirations. Remember, the journey towards achieving your goals is as important as the destination itself.
